ABSTRACT

A method of controlling use of a printer on a network includes providing a key to a client on the network. The key is then used to submit a print job from the client to a printer on the network.